FIELD HOUSE ESTATE, LOUGHBOROUGH.

OPPOSITION TO COLLEGE SCHEME.

PROPOSAL TO SET ASIDE A COVENANT.

The Field House Estate, for many years the residence of the late Mr. W. C. Burdett, J.P., and which the governors of Loughborough College propose purchasing for use as a tutors' residence, schoolroom, or a hostel, was the subject of an inquiry by Mr. John Wilcock (Birmingham), at the Town Hall to-day.

When the late Mr. W. C. Burdett bought the estate, there was a covenant attached to it that it should always be used for residential purposes.

The property is now in the hands of executors, who propose setting aside the covenant, and disposing of the property to the College, the potential buyers.

Mr. Powell said the property was subject to a scheme under the Housing and Town Planning Act, and whatever the object of the application might be the matter would ultimately have to come before the committee for their consent to the modifications to enable the college to use the premises for the work they required.

Mr. Powell submitted that Messrs. Deane and Tucker had no locus standi, and they could not, under any circumstances, suffer any loss if the restriction, as far as the covenant was concerned, should be erased on the adjoining estate and at a rate not exceeding £20 a year.

They were not seeking to do anything like that, although they could do it. How then, faced with that potential use of the land, could Messrs. Deane and Tucker say that they would suffer any loss if the premises were used for educational purposes?

POLICEMAN'S HAND READ.

TOLD HE WOULD NEVER WANT.

"YOUR LUCK WILL CHANGE."

BARRISTER AND "ANCIENT SCIENCE."

"Although palmistry has been an offence against the law since 1547," said Mr. Myer Cohen at Cardiff, to-day, "it is one of the most ancient sciences in history."

He was defending two women charged with professing to tell fortunes.

The women, Lena Stevenson, 53, and Lizzie Stevenson, 37, were dressed in gaily-coloured and picturesque raiments.

One of the persons to have his hand read was a police officer.

"I held out my right hand," said Police Constable Britton, "and Lena Stevenson said: 'You are very kind and courteous. You have never wanted, and you never will, but your luck will change.'"

Mr. Cohen said the women really believed that they had occult power handed down to their tribe through the centuries. There was no doubt that palmistry was a science. It was even mentioned in the Scriptures.
